A Historical Tapestry Unraveled

The genesis of Capricorn Plaza can be traced back to the 1970s, a period of profound urban renewal in downtown Vancouver. As part of an ambitious plan to revitalize the city's core, the site where Capricorn Plaza now stands was earmarked for a significant redevelopment project.

In 1979, renowned architect Michel Nadeau was commissioned to design a multifaceted complex that would not only serve as a commercial and residential hub but also embody Vancouver's evolving artistic expression. Nadeau's vision for Capricorn Plaza was audacious: to create a vibrant urban oasis where art and architecture seamlessly intertwined.

Nadeau collaborated closely with a team of talented artists, including renowned muralists and mosaicists. Together, they set out to transform the plaza into a living canvas, a captivating symphony of colors, textures, and forms.

Capricorn Plaza's architectural design is a masterpiece in itself. The complex consists of two interconnected towers, one residential and one commercial, rising above a vibrant public plaza. The exteriors are adorned with a captivating blend of glass, steel, and concrete, creating a dynamic visual interplay.

Nadeau's vision for Capricorn Plaza extended beyond its physical structure. He conceived it as a vibrant public space, a place where people could gather, socialize, and engage with the arts. The public plaza, the heart of the complex, is an urban oasis adorned with lush greenery, comfortable seating areas, and a stunning water feature.

But it is the plaza's crowning glory, the mosaic murals, that truly set Capricorn Plaza apart. These vibrant artworks, meticulously crafted from millions of hand-cut tiles, grace the plaza's walls, transforming it into an outdoor gallery. The murals depict scenes of Vancouver's past, present, and future, capturing the city's multicultural heritage and its vibrant spirit.

A Mosaic Tapestry of Artistic Expression

One mural, titled "The Dance of Life," captures the vibrancy and energy of Vancouver's multicultural population. Another, "The History of Vancouver," depicts key moments from the city's past, from its Indigenous roots to its modern development. These murals serve as a vibrant reminder of the city's heritage and its ongoing evolution.

The murals at Capricorn Plaza are not only visually captivating but also technically impressive. The artists used a variety of tile sizes, shapes, and colors to create a rich and textured effect. The tiles are meticulously cut and arranged, creating a seamless mosaic that appears to flow effortlessly across the plaza's walls.
